- Timeline:
  - MOEM contacted on 11/12/13 at 7:30 PM
  - Noon on 11/13/13, receive phone call
  - Flight at 0600 on 11/14/13
- Pre-deployment Info:
  - Small medical group sponsored by Delta Airlines
  - Tents, food, water, and security would be provided
  - Working with Filipino team deploying to Eastern Samar Province

Recruitment

“This is austere, this is disorganized and this is voluntary. That’s the bad news. I suggest, indeed strongly urge you to bring your own fully provisioned go kit for a 10 day deployment, this includes full gear for tropical deployment and don’t forget your bathing suit, sun screen, mosquito spray, snake kit and steel toed shoes! This organization generally does Critical Incident Stress work and seems to be retooling themselves at the same time they are deploying.”

Pre-Deployment

- Team:
  - 12 members
  - Fire, EMS, Law Enforcement, Public Health, Search and Rescue, EM
  - Florida, New Orleans, MD, NYC, Illinois, Vancouver, Portland...
- Mission:
  - IMT for medical team
  - Provide immediate aid and prepare for mid-term interventions in Guiuan, Eastern Samar

'Eastern Samar is gone'

Hero to zero? Noy feels backlash

Two days before one of the world's most powerful typhoons rammed into the Philippines, President Aquino had a simple but ambitious target for all government agencies: zero casualties.

Fast-forward a week: thousands are dead, anger is growing over the slow relief effort, and Aquino's once-unassailable popularity is under threat - along with the reforms that have helped transform the Philippines into one of Asia's fastest-growing and hottest emerging economies.

Typhoon survivors, waiting to leave the province of Leyte in the aftermath of Yolanda, are shown in the hold of a C-130 military transport plane at Tacloban airport in Leyte yesterday.

By PAOLO ROMERO

Tacloban and other parts of Leyte were not the only places severely hit by Super Typhoon Yolanda. "Eastern Samar is gone," Rep. Ben Evardone of the province lamented yesterday as he sought emergency assistance for his home province.

Evardone made the assessment after he was able to visit even remote towns in Eastern Samar on Monday by hitchhiking rides on helicopters and trucks.

He has helped marshal social workers, soldiers and volunteers to distribute aid to the victims, but sighs, "I really don't know where to start. I cannot imagine the devastation that hit my province."

As he saw the province from a helicopter, he told himself, "There is no more Eastern Samar province." "You cannot recognize it. The devastation was horrific," he told reporters, his voice cracking.

He said he flew over the coastal municipalities that were swept away by a storm surge triggered by Yolanda.

Pinoys abroad seek news on loved ones, rally aid

HONG KONG - They gather in California churches, in Hong Kong shopping malls, at prayer vigils in Bahrain and on hastily launched Facebook pages. Philippine overseas workers, cut off from home after a super typhoon killed thousands, are coming together to pray, swap information and launch aid drives.

Above all, many of the more than 10.5 million Filipinos abroad - some 10 percent of the country's population - are desperately dialing phone numbers that don't answer in the typhoon zone, where aid is still only slowly trickling in and communications have been largely blown away.

"I call again, and I keep trying and trying and trying, but no one answered," said Princess Howard, a worker at a money transfer business in Hong Kong, of her attempts to reach her 62-year-old grandfather and nine other relatives in Leyte, which was flattened when Typhoon Haiyan or Yolanda hit one week ago.
